

A Happy Thought

It was, this morning, the proportions of the human form and then building a garment in accordance with those figures. Like all good things the idea has received the support of thoughtful men since its inception. Why should it not? In the ready to wear garment you must of necessity content yourself with what comes nearest to being a fit. In the tailored suit, the fit is assured when the order is given. Our materials are all that could be desired and our workmen know how to use these materials to the best advantage. You do not pay any more.

LEECH SET FOR TRIAL OCT. 3

Slayer of El Kohlberg to Go on Trial Next Month. Many Other Murder Cases

NEGRO TO BE TRIED FOR WIFE MURDER

The case of John Leech, charged with the murder of E. Kohlberg on June 17 last, will be called for hearing in the 21st district court before Judge Harper on October 2, according to the present setting. Leech was indicted by the grand jury immediately following the killing of Kohlberg and it was proposed at that time to give him a trial. His local attorney, P. E. Gardner, succeeded in securing a continuance of the case. A special venire of 150 men has been ordered for the trial.

Since the killing of Mr. Kohlberg, Leech has been confined in the county jail, bond having been denied him. Kohlberg was shot on the afternoon of June 17, following a conversation with Leech. The killing occurred in Kohlberg's cigar store on El Paso street.

The charge of murder registered against Frank Lawson, a negro, who is charged with killing his wife, Drusilla Lawson, on July 25, is set for hearing on October 12 and a special venire of 100 men has been ordered for the trial. In addition to the charge of murder registered against Lawson, two indictments charging him with assault with intent to commit murder have been returned. He is charged with attempting to kill his mother-in-law and postmaster Smith.

The trial of Marshall Jackson, a negro, charged with killing Madison Graham, another negro, on May 20, has been set for hearing before Judge Harper on October 24. A venire of 50 men has been ordered to appear.

On the charge of murdering Augustus Villegran on February 12, last, Michael Cinceros will be arraigned in the 34th district court on October 27. A venire of 50 men has been ordered for the trial.

INVESTIGATING THE LORIMER BRIBE CHARGES

hit either by innuendo or by direct accusation on the part of men who admitted they had been bribed to vote for Lorimer.

Votes Were High.
According to the stories told by those who had been drawn into grand jury nets, the price paid for Lorimer votes ran from $1000 to $2500. This last amount was paid to state senator Holt, a banker and prominent member of the Baptist church in his home town. By his own confession, he received $2500 for voting for Lorimer, and he declared that the money had been paid to him in Chicago by state senator John Broderick, a west side saloon-keeper of Chicago and a man who had known Lorimer intimately for years.

The first charges made by White came after he had written letters to senator Lorimer in Washington, intimating that he wanted money for several purposes and also that he intended publishing a book of his experiences in the Illinois legislature. It appears also from things which developed after the investigation, that representative Lee O'Neill Browne, minority leader in the Illinois lower house and a man known to be friendly to Lorimer, "interested" in the bribe.

The Browne Charges.
Then came the charge on the heels of this that Lee O'Neill Browne was the chief briber in the legislature and that he had bribed Lorimer to vote for Lorimer by paying him $1000. This "confession" on White's part led to a confession from several other legislators, among whom were Michael S. Link, of Mitchell, and H. J. Becke, mayor of Carlinville. They told the story of how they had been bribed to vote for Lorimer and of how the money for their votes had been paid to them by Browne.

Into this whole mass of alleged corruption came stories of extensive bribery in securing the passage of certain laws and grafting contracts and the same men who were mixed up in the Lorimer bribery scandal were also connected with the other charges of corruption. In fact the evidence developed by investigations, conducted independently by state's attorney Burke of Sangamon county and state's attorney Wayman, of Cook county, tend to show that there was a bribery ring in existence at the state capitol of Illinois which divided corruption money and had this money gathered together in "jack pots" so that it could be apportioned equally between the bribe takers.

Division of "Jack Pot."
White, the accuser of Browne, admitted that he was a member of this ring and had told of how he met five other state representatives in St. Louis and of how one "jack pot" divided at the Southern hotel there netted each member $500.

The evidence of the bribe takers to the leaders of the corruptionists in the legislature was complete, according to White. He says they would have voted for anyone for senator and for anyone for congressman who would give them the "bribe." He declared that the "jack pot" money in St. Louis was distributed by representative Robert E. Wilson of Chicago, a friend of Browne.

When the charges were made public they were met by an indignant denial on the part of senator Lorimer and while the pot was boiling over he announced that he would make a public reply to his accusers on the floor of the United States senate. He did so and in a speech 15,000 words long, went on to state that the charges were not only lies but that they were the outgrowth of enmity borne against him by the Chicago Tribune, Gov. Deneen and several political enemies. He declared that he would not be deterred by the charges and would swear to false affidavits regarding the alleged bribery and that the reason the Tribune had done this was because he refused to pay political homage to the proprietors and editors of that paper.

Lorimer's Defence.
Friends of Senator Lorimer say that the defense he will introduce before the senate committee will follow closely the lines he laid down in his speech to the senate body when answering publicly the charges made that his seat had been bought.

In making his public defense senator Lorimer declared that Gov. Deneen was angry at him because he would not enter into the governor's schemes for the handling of the funds to build a "deep waterway" and that on the night before the charges of bribery were published the governor was seen coming out of the Tribune office. He also made a strong point of the integrity of Lee O'Neill Browne and said that he was a God fearing man and believed implicitly in the bible, for Browne himself had told him of this belief. He declared that White was a blackmailer, pure and simple and had simply tried to get money from him and had been refused.

Further than this, the senator contended that White's story was sprung at a time when his evident purpose was to injure a bank and trust company that he had established in Chicago and that it was printed at a time when it would do him the most harm—just at the time the company was throwing open its doors for business. He declared that the Tribune officials had threatened to wreck these banks if he dared to start them.

No mention was ever made by any witness of senator Lorimer's direct connection with the bribery charges. His name was brought into the matter solely through the statement that Browne had secured his (Lorimer's) election by bribery.

Synopsis of Previous Chapters.

Boyd Emerson and "Fingerless" Fraser enter Katvik, Alaska, and meet a young white woman, Cherry Malotte, who shelters them.

Cherry describes the salmon fisheries and the unscrupulous head of the Katvik cannery.

Cherry owns a cannery site. Emerson, George Balt and she go into partnership. Emerson describes his failure to "make good" in Alaska.

Emerson kisses Cherry goodbye. Balt, Fraser and Emerson nearly lose their lives in Katvik pass and miss the steamer at Katvik on their way out to get capital.

After dreadful privations they catch the boat at Kadiak and are soon en route for Chicago. Emerson seeks Miss Mildred Wayland.

She and Emerson are engaged. Her father, Wayne Wayland, is a millionaire. Alton Clyde offers $10,000 toward the cannery.

Balt and Emerson meet Marsh in Chicago. Marsh is a suitor for Mildred's hand. Marsh tells Mildred about Cherry Malotte. He and Wayne Wayland plan a cannery trust.

Mildred learns that Emerson and Cherry are partners. Banker Hilliard, Seattle, refuses to lend Emerson $100,000. Cherry, who has arrived in Seattle, accepts a dinner invitation from Hilliard.

Cherry discovers that Emerson is to marry Mildred. Marsh causes annoying delays for Emerson's loan. Clyde suggests that Cherry can get the loan from Hilliard.

Emerson enrages Cherry by criticizing her friendly relations with Hilliard. Cherry sees Hilliard, who unexpectedly furnishes the money. Marsh causes a strike, delaying the loading of Emerson's machinery.

Balt's fishermen fight the strikers. Fraser shoots a striker and impersonates Emerson, for whom a warrant is issued.

"I did. I want a bath and some clean clothes and a whole lot of sleep." He was granted his desires.

The Bedford Castle having discharged her cargo steamed away to return in August.

The middle of June brought the first king salmon, scouts sent on ahead of the "sockeyes;" but Boyd made no effort to take advantage of this run, laboring manfully to prepare for the advance of the main army, that terrific horde that was soon to come from the mysterious depths either to make or ruin him. Once the run proper started there would be no more opportunity for building or for setting up machinery. He must be ready and waiting by the first of July.

For some time his tin machines had been busy night and day turning out great heaps of gleaming cans, while the carpenters and machinists completed their tasks. The gill netters were overhauling their gear, the beach was lined with fishing boats. On their dock great piles of seines and drift nets were being inspected. Three miles below Big George with a picked crew and a pileriver was building the fishtrap. It consisted of half mile "leads," or rows of piling, capped with stringers upon which netting was hung and terminated in "beats," "corals" and "spillers," the intricate arrangements of webbing and timbers out of which the fish were to be taken.

As for Boyd the fever in his veins mounted daily as he saw his dream assuming concrete form. Always he found Cherry at his shoulder, unobtrusive and silent for the most part, yet intensely observant and keenly self had told him of this belief. He declared that White was a blackmailer, pure and simple and had simply tried to get money from him and had been refused.

Further than this, the senator contended that White's story was sprung at a time when his evident purpose was to injure a bank and trust company that he had established in Chicago and that it was printed at a time when it would do him the most harm—just at the time the company was throwing open its doors for business. He declared that the Tribune officials had threatened to wreck these banks if he dared to start them.

Banker Drops Dead.
Abilene, Kas., Sept. 12.—J. S. Hallam, alive to every action. She seemed to have the faculty of divination, knowing when to be silent and when to join her mood with his, and she gave him valuable help, for she possessed a practical mind. One day when their preparations were nearly completed a foreman came to Boyd and said excitedly:

"Boss, I'd like you to look at the Iron Chinks right away."

"What's up?"

"I don't know, but something is wrong." A hurried examination showed the machines to be cunningly crippled; certain parts were entirely missing while others were broken.

The Iron Chink, or mechanical cleaner, is perhaps the most ingenious of the many labor saving devices used in the salmon fisheries. It is an awkward looking, yet very effective contrivance of revolving knives and conveyors which seizes the fish whole and delivers it cleaned, clipped, cut and ready to be washed. With superhuman dexterity it does the work of twenty lightning like butchers. Without the aid of these Iron Chinks Boyd knew that his fish would spoil before they could be handled. He hastened straightway to George Balt. A half hour's run down the bay and he clamored from his launch to the pile driver, where, amid the confusion and noise, he made known his tidings. The big fellow's calmness amazed him.

"What are you going to do now?"

"Butcher by hand," said the fisherman.

"But how? That takes skilled labor—lots of it."

George grinned. "I'm too old a bird."

"Fraser!" they cried in chorus. To be caught like this, I figured on accidents from the start, and when I hired my Chinamen I included a crew of cutters. Willis Marsh will have to try again."

CHAPTER XIV.

WHILE they were talking a tugboat towing a pile driver came into view. Boyd asked the meaning of its presence in this part of the river.

"I don't know," answered Big

George, starting intently. "Wonder looks like another one behind it, with a raft of piles."

"I thought all the company traps were up stream."

"So they are. I can't tell what they're up to."

A half hour later, when the new flotilla had come to anchor a short distance below, Emerson's companion began to swear.

"I might have known it."

"What?"

"Marsh aims to 'cock' us."

"What is that?"

"He's going to build a trap on each side of this one and cut off our fish."

"Good Lord! Can he do that?"

"Sure! Why not? The law gives us 600 yards both ways. As long as he stays outside of that limit he can do anything he wants to."

"Then of what use is our trap? The salmon follow definite courses close to the shore, and if he intercepts them before they reach us—why, then we'll get only what he lets through."

"That's his plan," said Big George solemnly. "It's an old game, but it don't always work. You can't tell what salmon will do till they do it. I've studied this point of land for five years, and I know more about it than anybody else except the Creator. If the fish hug the shore, then we're up against it, but I think they strike in about here; that's why I chose this site. We can't tell, though, till the run starts. All we can do now is see that them people keep their distance."

The "lead" of a salmon trap consists of a row of web hung piling that runs out from the shore for many hundred feet, forming a high, stout fence that turns the schools of fish and leads them into cunningly contrived inclosures, or "pounds," at the outer extremity, from which they are "hauled" as needed. These corrals are so built that once the fish are inside they cannot escape. The entire structure is devised upon the principle that the salmon will not make a short turn, but will swim as nearly as possible in a straight line. It looked to Boyd as if Marsh, by blocking the line of progress above and below, had virtually destroyed the efficiency of the new trap, rendering the cost of its construction a total loss.

That evening when he had seen the night shift started Emerson decided to walk up to Cherry's house, for he was worried over the day's developments and felt that an hour of the girl's society might serve to clear his thoughts.

Cherry's house was situated a short distance above the cannery which served as Willis Marsh's headquarters, and Boyd's path necessarily took him past his enemy's very stronghold. Finding the tide too high to permit of passing beneath the dock, he turned up among the buildings, where, to his surprise, he encountered his own day foreman talking earnestly with a stranger.

The fisherman started guiltily.

"What are you doing here, Larsen?" asked Boyd.

THE EFFECT OF THE MAD DOG BITE.

United States Government Says Rabies Are as Dangerous in Winters as in Summer—The "Madstone" Fallacy.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 12.—In a public health service report, A. M. Stimson, its author, repudiates certain mad dog fallacies. This report from surgeon general Wyman's bureau admits rabies may not be uniformly fatal, though it is almost so.

"We do not know," said the report, "that artificial immunity can be conferred during the usual incubation period. The possibilities of anti-rabies serum have not been exhausted by trial but our present data do not warrant us to expect very much benefit from this source."

Mad dogs are not always wild eyed and frothing at the mouth and they are not always dangerous to persons they meet. The report contends that when the attack first begins to develop dogs are frequently more playfully inclined. "The rabid dog is sick; he is not necessarily running wild and furious; he is frequently obedient up to a late stage and often seems to have a home in his throat or to have sustained injury to the back."

Another fallacy is the general belief that rabies are much more easily transmitted in the summer than in other months. More people are moving about and thereby become subject to attack. Nor is the malady confined to any climate or region.

The madstone and chicken breasts as cures for the malady are arranged as real dangers, because they frequently prevent people from seeking other remedies.

The average period of incubation is a little over 10 weeks, but in some persons the effect of a mad dog bite is not manifested for more than a year.
